There for our neighbors in Saipan

In early August, Typhoon Soudelor slammed the Northern Mariana Islands, part of the American Red Cross Pacific Islands Region, with winds of up to 120 mph. President Obama issued a Major Federal Disaster Declaration after more than 1,100 homes were reported damaged and most of the island of Saipan was without power, water and waste treatment facilities for weeks.

“It was a really catastrophic event,” says John Hirsh, executive director of the American Red Cross Northern Mariana Islands Chapter. “I’ve never seen a storm that’s done this much damage to our islands.”

Red Cross workers jump into action

In the three days following the storm, over 2,000 calls for assistance came in to the Red Cross. Close to 600 residents spent multiple nights in shelters and the Red Cross provided over 12,000 meals and snacks within the first week following the storm. Thousands of relief items were passed out to residents and workers from Hawaii, Guam and the Mainland who provided assistance.

The Red Cross also created a robust relief plan that combined financial assistance with critical supplies to help people recover from the devastation of Typhoon Soudelor.

“It was hectic, but it was productive,” says Claudine Atalig, a Red Cross Volunteer. “I was happy to see people’s smiles with the things that we gave.”

Animals provide comfort at Tripler Army Medical Center

Red Cross volunteers and staff work with military and veterans’ healthcare facilities to provide rehabilitation therapy and morale-building activities that are vital to the recovery of service members and veterans.

At Tripler Army Medical Center, the American Red Cross Hawaii State Chapter facilitated the Human Animal Bond Program that uses the therapeutic healing power of dogs to help patients recover from physical and mental illness. Volunteers bring their dogs to the facility to provide comfort and companionship.

Healing power of our four-footed friends

Red Cross Volunteer Glenn Suzuki experienced the benefits of human-animal interaction firsthand with his dog, Daniel. “When I was working, I had a bad stomach ulcer. When I got Daniel, I would hold him at night and noticed that the pain would go away. That’s when I realized that dogs must have therapeutic value—just holding them, the warmth, comfort and security made me feel a lot better. I just thought that if it could help me, it could help others too.”

Daniel and Glenn have been Red Cross volunteers since March 2009, visiting patients at Tripler Army Center at least once a week for 3-4 hours. That’s 150 hours of canine love each year!

5 ways to stay safe this holiday season

With the decorations up and holiday music on the radio, remember to follow safety measures to ensure homes and loved ones are safe from the threat of fire.

1. Keep children, pets and decorations away from lit candles.
2. Check food regularly and remain at home while cooking. Use a timer as a reminder that the stove or oven is on.
3. Remember the three feet rule: Keep flammable materials at least three feet away from space heaters.
4. If you are using a fireplace, use a screen large enough to catch sparks and rolling logs.
5. Replace any string of lights with worn or loose bulb connections. Connect no more than three strands of mini light sets.

Red Cross training pays off

In the choppy waters of Kalapaki Bay, Kauai, Steve Soltysik and his friends were on a canoe outing when they saw two paddle boarders who looked to be in trouble. They ended up helping to save a life.

As they pulled up alongside, one of the struggling men was so exhausted that he lost grip on the board. “Just as we got there, he was going under,” says Steve.

Red Cross training saves a stranger

Steve, who is a Red Cross certified water safety teacher, jumped in, held on to the paddleboard and grabbed the man as he slipped underwater. They lifted him into the canoe, where he collapsed. Steve then climbed on the other man’s paddleboard with him and they all headed to shore.

A modest hero

“We just happened to be at the right place at the right time,” says Steve as he downplayed his role in the rescue. “I just maneuvered the canoe and got us in the right position.”

In addition to teaching water safety, Steve also volunteers with the Red Cross as a first aid and CPR instructor, teaching lifesaving skills to the Kauai community and serving as the disaster services logistics lead on Kauai.

“My Red Cross training really paid off in this situation,” he says. “It was a good day on the water.”

Supporting our veterans

The American Red Cross is proud to continue our legacy of working side-by-side with the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) in service of our country’s veterans. The Red Cross has a long history of service to the veteran community, not only as advocates for veterans seeking benefits, but also as a source of employment. In the past three years, the Red Cross has hired over 2,000 veterans.

Helping heroes transition

In August, the Red Cross partnered with VA and Coursera to launch a new, no-cost online training program, VA Learning Hubs, to help transitioning service members and veterans learn skills, earn credentials and advance in civilian careers following separation from service. This program is part of VA’s Veterans Economic Communities Initiative, which promotes education and employment opportunities through integrated networks of support at a local level. The program launched in 27 cities across the U.S., including Honolulu.

Through VA Learning Hubs, transitioning service members and veterans can take advantage of both online and in-person study. Each week, online course modules are completed outside the classroom while class sessions, led by volunteer subject matter experts and Red Cross facilitators, provide opportunities to discuss course materials and hear from experts. The sessions include: networking opportunities, guest speakers and Q&A with experts from the community.

Veterans deserve every opportunity to make a successful transition to civilian life. The Red Cross is here to help them continue to live the American dream and bring the opportunity for career enhancement to their doorstep.
